take the nags, and the old gentleman entering the mansion was received by Mrs. Wash-

"From New York, madam," answered the old man. "I come to Mt. Vernon on an errand—for the country at least. The General has been elected President of the United States under the new constitution, and I am the bearer of the happy tidings in a letter

The General was out visiting his farm, however, and the guests were entertained for two or three hours as we take care of visitors in the country now a days. The cheerful gossip of Mrs. Washington, who had known Mr. Thompson and visited his house in Philadelphia, helped to enliven the time. He had been the Sacretary, through all its career, of the Contiuental Congress, which had directed the cause of the colonies from desultory revolt to independence and to union, and now he had ridden over the long and difficult roads to apprize the first President of the Republic of the wishes of his countrymen. At one o'clock General Washington rode into the lawn at Mt. Vernon, in appearance, what Custis, his adopted son, has described him : An old gentleman, riding alone, in plain drab clothes, a broad brimmed white hat, a hickory switch in his hand, and earrying an umbrella with a long staff, which is attached to his saddle-how. The umbrella was used to shelter him from the suo, for his skin was tender and easily affected to its rays. Washington greeted Mr. Thompson with grave wordiality, as was his wont; inquiring for his family, and divining already the object of visit, broke the seal of John Langdon's official letter. Dinner followed, and while the visitors retired to converse or stroll about the grounds, the President elect wrote a letter to the President of the Senate, and sent it forthwith to the postoffice at Alexandria by a ser-

"SIR: I had the honor to receive your official communication by the hand of Mr. Secretary Thompson about one o'clock to day. Having with the idea of the expediency of my being with Congress at as early a period as possible, I propose to commence my journey on Thursday morning, which will be the day after to-mor-

This done, the rest of the day passed in conference between Washington and his wife in the preparation of his baggage for the not unexpected journey, while, meantime, the distinguished guest was amused by the young day on which our story opens, when Washington mounted his horse, and, followed by his man Billy, rode off into the woods of Virginia with speed. His destination was Fredericksburg, nearly forty miles away, with two ferries since he had visited her, but he could not feel equal to the responsibilities of his office until he should receive her blessing. Few candidates for the Presidency in our day would leave a warm mansion filled with congratulating ington began. He passed old l'ohiek church of which he was a vestryman -- soon to tumble to ruins-crossed the roaring Occequan, and Marches, perils, victories, power, surrendered to that look of helpless love, too deep fer pride to show through tears, and the President of the new S. ate was to her a new bere babe again no dea. er, no greater. He was just in time, for she h ad but the short season of summer to live; and lik a many dying mothers, life seemed to uphold a. fourscore and five by waiting till he should co. ne. History is ceremonious as to what passed between them, but the parting was solema at touching, like the event. "You will see me no more, said she. My great age and disease warn me that I shall not be long in this world. But go, George, to fulfil the destiny which heaven appears to assign you. Go, my son, and may heaven's and your

the President elect perh aps did not hear the plaudits of the people in the streets of Freder icksburg. He rode all day by the road he had come, and reached Mount Vornon before evening, having exhibited his power of endurance at the age of fifty seven by riding eighty miles in twenty four hours. His good wife had made all ready; the equipages were at the door next morning, and leaving Mrs. Washington and most of the household behind, he set out for Now York at ten o'clock on Thursday, the 16th of April, accompanied by Thompson and Humphries. The new State was waiting anxiously
